

Here are some special activities for May 16

Suggested Activities for I Love to Listen Day

- Stop what you are doing and listen to someone.
- Organize a party and play listening games.
- Send a card/letter/email thanking someone who listened to you.
- Start a family tradition of “listening Time.”
- Develop your definition of listening.
- Listen to a book on tape with someone else.
- Learn something new about listening such as, reading a book or taking a class.
- Educators can teach students about the different types of listening and play listening comprehension games.
- Counselors can teach and encourage the use of reflective listening.
- Visit with an elderly person and just listen
- Visit with a child and just listen
- Give “Good Listening” awards to anyone in your community who consistently listens well.
- Memorize texts, proverbs, or sayings on listening.
- Write a poem, song or letter about listening.
- Compliment someone’s attentive listening habits.
- Commit to improving your listening skills.
- Share your plans to improve your listening skills with someone.
- Reflect on your listening attitude toward people who belong to different cultures.
- Make a list of your positive listening habits
- Be a listening role model
- Serve someone by just listening without an agenda.
- Create a positive listening environment in your workplace, home and social settings.
- Commit to actively embrace listening as an integral part of your leadership style
- Tell at least 16 people about I Love to Listen Day – May 16
- Hearing is a function of the ear but listening is a function of the will ~ John Maxwell.
(www.ILoveToListen.com)
- Stop what you are doing and listen to someone.
- Organize a party and play listening games.

- Send a card/letter/email thanking someone who listened to you.
- Start a family tradition of “listening Time.”
- Develop your definition of listening
- Listen to a book on tape with someone else.
- Learn something new about listening such as, reading a book or taking a class.
- Educators can teach students about the different types of listening and play listening comprehension games.
- Counselors can teach and encourage the use of reflective listening.
- Visit with an elderly person and just listen
- Visit with a child and just listen
- Give “Good Listening” awards to anyone in your community who consistently listens well.
- Memorize texts, proverbs, or sayings on listening.
- Write a poem, song or letter about listening.
- Compliment someone’s attentive listening habits.
- Commit to improving your listening skills.
- Share your plans to improve your listening skills with someone
- Reflect on your listening attitude toward people who belong to different cultures.
- Make a list of your positive listening habits
- Be a listening role model
- Serve someone by just listening without an agenda.
- Create a positive listening environment in your workplace, home and social settings.
- Commit to actively embrace listening as an integral part of your leadership style
- Tell at least 16 people about I Love to Listen Day – May 16.
- Hearing is a function of the ear but listening is a function of the will ~ John Maxwell.
(www.ILoveToListen.com)